SleepSmart, Hi Nr 7, lipiec 2005

Students from Brown University in the States have built a very intelligent alarm clock. It`s called SleepSmart, and looks like a headset that is connected by wireless to a regular alarm clock. The inventors say that it turns on only when the user is fully rested! How`s that possible? SleepSmart measures brain activity. There are three phases of sleeping, and each of them – light sleep, deep sleep, and REM sleep- occur every 90 minutes or so. Scientists have discovered that only if people wake up during light sleep do they feel fresh and rested. And that`s how SleepSmart works. When we set the alarm clock for 7 a.m., the microchip makes sure the alarm doesn`t go off exactly at 7, but during the last phase of light sleep that precedes the time you`ve pre-programmed. Simple but ingenious.
