Graham Bell came up with the idea of the telephone in 1876, he could not possibly have predicted how this (1)..... would change the world in years to come. One of the most (2) ..... developments in the telecommunications field in the so-called Typephone. It aimed (3) ..... deaf and speech impaired people and allows them to communicate with (4) ..... people all over the world. In practical terms, Typephone can be compared (5) ..... an ordinary textphone, which can be used to (6) ..... calls through a specially-trained team of operators.

No (7) ..... devices are needed since every (8). ..... has been made to ensure that procedure is simple and user-friendly; the deaf person's textphone message is translated (9) ..... speech for the hearing person, while the latter's response is received by the deaf person in the form of a written message. (10)..... is more, long-distance calls can be made at a lower price at eight o'clock in the evening. Typephone is getting on pretty fast and has already helped a great number of deaf and speech-impaired people to communicate more effectively. It comes as no surprise, then, that number of people using it every week is rapidly increasing.
